What's New in the?

The brand-new Microsoft SQL Server 2016 delivers a new service-oriented architecture (SOA) engine that lets you write your own services and access the data they contain. Version 2016 also improves performance, extends scalability, and adds new features to support Web, mobile, and cloud services. These enhancements are part of a new version called SQL Server 2016 Data-tier Application Framework. The new SQL Server Data-tier Application Framework (DTDF) adds a new "app" model to the SQL Server database. With the app framework, you can create a set of business and data logic functions that reside in SQL Server. Then, you can use SQL Server for data storage, but your business logic functions are available for access, in addition to stored procedures. The new SQL Server database engine and apps make it possible to run your own custom business logic functions. In particular, this helps you get more flexibility and control of the storage of your data in SQL Server, as well as the usage of SQL Server for business logic functions. Data-tier applications are self-contained, and they also provide transparency into data processing, so they are suitable for batch processing. SQL Server 2016 is built on four basic layers that include an application-aware data-tier, a data-tier, a service-oriented architecture, and an application-oriented storage layer. The Data-tier uses a layered architecture that provides a conceptual layer. Data-tier is the foundation of the application-aware data-tier.
